

Teen Connection
Project TCP[™]
W Y M A N

A highly engaging, evidence-based, social emotional learning program for high school students, focused on building healthy relationships and connections.

The best part of TCP for me was all of the initiatives that we did. It helped me learn a lot about my peers and have an opportunity for them to get to know me.

TCP

A turn-key, sequenced curriculum of 12 interactive group lessons on topics including communication, conflict, trust, vulnerability, giving and getting support, and recognizing strengths.

HOW TCP WORKS

TCP is used with high school students in a variety of settings, including in and out of schools. Through the progression of lessons, along with group discussions led by trained facilitators, teens learn to interact, share, and improve connections with others.

OUTCOMES

Teens leave TCP with new skills they apply to relationships outside of the program. Research and evaluation data show that TCP supports teens to develop:

Higher quality
peer relationships &
connections to others

Greater school belonging/engagement

Improved social-emotional skills

Improved
well-being

TCP has received CASEL's highest designation
for high-quality SEL programming

BECOMING A TCP PARTNER

SEL skills are a foundation for successful adolescence and adulthood, yet many teens lack healthy, positive, and affirming relationships. TCP supports teens in building healthy connections and relationships with peers and adults.

Wyman actively seeks schools and community-based organizations, committed to high-quality SEL support for teens, to become TCP partners.

TCP encouraged the teens to be true to their emotions, gave them tools and strategies to make connections, and made them feel less isolated.

TCP offered many of these teens a safe space to express themselves when nobody else listened to them.

R. Levario, TCP Facilitator

Through Wyman's partnership replication model, organizations receive all the training and support necessary to successfully implement the program:

The best part is being able to get some things off your chest that have been bothering you or taking a toll on you, and people being able to hear you out and understand.
